Program Costs

No program costs are required.

Library Resources

The Russian program’s budget for book acquisitions is $850 per year. This amount should eventually be increased.

Instructional

Facilities

No special instructional facilities are required.

Faculty Resources

Since the Spring 2019 semester, the Fulbright Language Teaching Assistant has been teaching elementary levels courses, which has helped with the growth of the program. The funding for the FLTA is covered by the Fulbright Program/Department of State. In the future, having additional teaching staff in a form of a T.A. or an instructor will be required.

Program Goals and

Objectives

Program Goals and Objectives

The goals and objectives of the Russian studies minor are to provide interdisciplinary, diverse, and critical approaches to ethnic, historical, linguistic, literary, religious, geographical, and political science fields of study on Russia and Eurasia. To prepare students for intermediate advanced language proficiency level in oral expression, listening comprehension, reading, writing, and cultural understanding of the multicultural, multilingual, and multidenominational Russian speaking world including diaspora. To develop students' ability to critically interpret, communicate, perform linguistic tasks, and become literate users of the Russian language. To enhance students' abilities to thoughtfully communicate in and engage with a variety of important philosophical, historical, racial, religious, and cultural problems and discussions, developing critical interpretive and thinking skills. To prepare students for a postgraduate career in Russian-related fields such as in diplomacy, international business, military, politics, academic spheres, education, journalism, law, humanities or sciences using linguistic, critical, and analytical skills.

Learning Outcomes

Learning Outcomes

Students have a strong understanding of the major historical, literary, and cultural time periods and events, as well as multicultural, multidenominational, and multilingual Russian and Eurasian geographical regions, acquiring an intermediate advanced level of Russian language proficiency. Through interdisciplinary courses in history, literature, Jewish Studies, political science, and international and global studies, students acquire analytical reading, writing, and thinking tools to discuss and engage with the wide-ranging topics pertained to Russia's past and current events in the global context. By studying Russian Jewish experiences through history, anthropology, philosophy, and literature, students receive diverse knowledge about major ethnic group. Students are uniquely equipped with the interdisciplinary knowledge about Russian and Eurasian regions that they can apply to different topics and develop their own positions towards diverse perspectives on indigenous cultures, Muslims, Buddhists, Jews, and Greek Orthodox groups represented in Russia and Russian speaking communities. Intermediate language skills enable students to speak beyond the topics of everyday life and converse on contemporary and past events, write and narrate in paragraph length, read unabridged news and texts, and have a strong grasp of different social linguistic registers and function in diverse cultural settings.

Description and Justification for this request

Description of request	Justification for request
Proposing a new interdisciplinary Russian Studies minor.	The Russian Studies Minor will be an important complement to existing majors and minors in the Business School, for international business, accounting, for the Fulbright College, for history, anthropology, sociology, music, math, engineering, for the College of Education, and for Area Studies Programs such as African and African American Studies, Gender Studies, Middle East Studies, International and Global Studies, and Jewish Studies, but goes far beyond them because it gives students linguistic and literary skills that sets them apart from other languages and cultures, and at the same time connects with their existing majors. Additionally, even though Arkansas has a small Russian speaking population, it is spoken by peoples of different ethnic and religious backgrounds, such as Jews, Muslims, Greek Orthodox, and Buddhists, which brings together diverse disciplines and perspectives that would

Description of request	Justification for request
	make the program viable to the already existing curriculum. The U of A is the only institution in the state of Arkansas that offers Russian language and literature courses. The State Department designated Russian as a critical need language because of its essential role for America’s national security and because of Russia’s growing nuclear and geopolitical power. To that end, the State Department created a “Critical Language Scholarship” to support students’ Russian language and cultural competence abroad. As a less commonly taught language, the Russian program attracts students from diverse ethnic, religious, social, economic, and cultural backgrounds that already major in different disciplines across different colleges, departments, and programs. In light of this, adding a Russian studies minor will make students more successful and competitive for the future international and national careers. Making an interdisciplinary and concentrated Russian studies minor is an important educational need in order to prepare our students for multicultural careers.
